HIGH SCORE ENERGY DRINK

Energy drink is a type of high-caffeine beverage that is mostly consumed because of the mental and physical stimulating effect it creates when drunk. In addition to being carbonated or non-carbonated, energy drinks contain many plant extracts, amino acids, sugar, taurine and sweeteners. Energy drinks, which are often mixed with sports drinks, are also incorrectly used for this purpose.

Naturally caffeinated beverages such as coffee and tea are not considered energy drinks. Drinks such as cola are not included in the energy drink class as they contain less caffeine.

Energy drinks are consumed for the health effects of caffeine as well as the benefits of the other ingredients they contain.

Since caffeine and alcohol are both diuretics, combined use increases the risk of dehydration. A mixture of stimulants (caffeine) and depressants (alcohol) sends conflicting messages to the nervous system and can cause increased heart rate and palpitations. For this reason, it should not be consumed with alcohol.
